At the age of 25, Muhammad married Khadijah, a wealthy widow who became his first wife. Together, they had six children.

The Call to Prophethood

In 610 CE, Muhammad received his first revelation from God. He was told to recite the words that would become the Quran, the holy book of Islam. Muhammad initially resisted his call to prophethood, but eventually he accepted his mission to spread the word of God. He began preaching in Mecca, but his teachings were met with opposition from the city's leaders. In 622 CE, Muhammad and his followers were forced to flee Mecca and settle in Medina.

The Hijrah

The Hijrah, or migration, to Medina was a turning point in Muhammad's life. In Medina, Muhammad established a new community of Muslims and began to build a following. He also led his followers in a series of battles against the Meccans. In 630 CE, Muhammad and his followers returned to Mecca in triumph. He had achieved his goal of uniting the Arabian Peninsula under Islam.
